

DJR Energy is an upstream oil and gas company which has used technical expertise and strong financial partnerships to build the premier operated position in the San Juan Basin of northern New Mexico. DJR Energy develops natural resources efficiently with community and environmental stewardship in mind.

It has been an exciting and rewarding experience to work with the Trilantic North American energy team; their expertise in the oil and gas industry and their leadership in the financial sector have made them a strong partner for DJR Energy. We look forward to continuing to build a highly profitable yet environment- and community-oriented business.

Key Initiatives

COMMUNITY

As DJR Energy operates on Native American reservations, the company has been proactive in establishing good working relationships with its surrounding community. DJR Energy hired a member of the Navajo nation to serve as a liaison between the company and local tribal communities. During the pandemic, the company contributed to several COVID-19 relief projects for the Navajo and Hickory nations to further strengthen relations with local tribes. DJR Energy also pays royalties to over 2,000 Native American royalty owners.

ENVIRONMENT

DJR Energy achieved carbon neutrality in 2021 for its scope 1 and scope 2 emissions. The company's carbon footprint, which accounts for annual carbon dioxide and methane emissions, is 100% below industry competitors in the San Juan Basin. This is made possible from the acquisition of offset credits from the Alkumru hydropower plant in Turkey. Since inception, DJR has spent $13.6M cleaning up sites inherited from previous Operators.
